Remarks of Scintor Van Winkle in Offering an Amendment to the Con-stitution of the United States on the Congressional Globe.

I offer the following amendment to

From the Congressional Globe.

I offer the following amendment to come in as a new section:

SEC.—Every person not mentioned or described in section three of this article who shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the United States and against whom no prosecution for treason has been instituted before the expiration of—years from the termination or suppression of such insurrection or rebellion, who shall there after before a court of record make oath to support the Constitution of the United States, shall thereupon be forever acquitted and discharged of and from all pains, penalties, liabilities, disabilities, and disqualifications incurred under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or of any State, by participation in such insurrection or rebellion, and if previously a citizen of the United States, privileges, and immunities of citizenship. But nothing in this section contained shall prevent the Congress passing a general or special act of amnesty as to any or all persons included in its provisions before the expiration of the said — years.

I do not propose, Mr. President, to detain the Senate for a moment by advocating the provisions of this amendment. If they do not commend themselves to Senators I am sure that nothing I could say would help the case. The object is easily perceived. It is, if we can, to make a finality of this matter; that while we have excluded certain persons from representation and from participation in the Government, the large class of persons who will still remain shall at some time—and I have left the number of years blank—be released from the pains and penalties they have incurred, or are supposed to have incurred, or are on the subject. I propose by this amendment that all I propose by this amendment that all those persons who are not embraced in the third section, which section, I take it, will include the most of those who were the instigators and fomentors of the rebellion, and all against whom no prosecution for treason shall be commenced within a certain number of years, shall, upon the expiration of that time, by taking an oath thereafter to support the constitution, in the usual form, be exonerated from all pains and penulties in consequence of their action. I need not say that there is something due to these people, even when

ion. There not say that there is some hing due to these people, even when heir delinquency is fully admitted. They are now in a situation where they cnow not what will be their future, and know not what will be their future, and I think it is due to the business of the country and to the more early resumption of the former friendly relations that existed between its and the people of those States, that something of this nature should at this time and in this connection, be ingrafted upon the constitution, or should accompany the sections of persons.

tions of persons.

I trust, sir, at any rate, that this amendment, or the spirit of it—for I am not anxious about the words—may receive such consideration from the Senators in the unjority as will induce them to give it a fair hearing. It is

Mr. Davis—I ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. Sherman—In addition to what the Senator from Michigan has said, it seems to me that this is a subject for legislation, not for constitutional amendment. We have already provided that the President of the United States may do precisely what would be done by this proposed amendment; and if more liberal legislation is required hereafter, and the President fails to extend animesty so broadly as it should be, Congress has always power to relieve, by a general act or special act, from the penalties of crime, and may provide for a general amnesty by law, I therefore submit to the Senator from West Virginia whether, although his Interesting Historical Facts—Virginia's Claim as the stother of States.

In 1506 or 7. King James of Great Britain granted to what was called the London Company a tract of territory commencing at Old Point Comfort and running two hundred miles north, thence west to the Western Ocean; in a southern direction the line ran two hundred miles south of Old Point Comfort, and thence west to the Western Ocean; in the collection of the Common ocean, If the terms of this conveyance were to be reckoned by geographical miles it would bring the northern into to latitude 40 degrees and 20 minutes; if the calculation were by English miles it would not vary over five inites from the south line of Pennsylvania. In the division of territories there was some trouble between the Plymouth and London Companies, and it is but fair to conclade that the line as now fixed, is the one mutually agreed upon. If a line was run due west, from the southern line of Pennsylvania to the Mississippi, there would not be more than one-sixth of the Northwestern Territory south of said line.

Senator Wilson addressed the thousands present, saying he had been requested to preside on this occasion, and to introduce the distinguished gentlemen who were to address them.

Senator Wilson then presented in succession Major General Banks, Major General Howard, Colonel McKee, Representative from Kentucky, and Senator Lane, of Indiana, whose remarks were altogether appropriate to the cocasion, and were received with repeated application, and were received with repeated application, and services with respect to the cocasion, and were received with repeated application.

of the proposed amendment; and if more liberal legislation is required hereafter, and the President falls to extend amnesty so broadly as it should be. Congress has always power to relieve, by a general act or special act, from the penalties of crime, and may provide for a general amnesty by law, it therefore submit to the Senator from West Virginia whether, although his proposition seems to be a reasonable provided for a general amnesty by law, it is of so temporary a character, and the matter may be regulated by law. Mr. Van Winkle—The amendment, when it is of so temporary a character, and the matter may be regulated by law. Mr. Van Winkle—The amendment, the wheard and read, nobody believes that the amnesty granted by the President of the contract the amnesty granted by the President will have that effect. At any rate, there is difference of opinion, the amnesty may be the president will have that effect. At any rate, there is difference of opinion, the amnest point and has been desired, and denied by those to whose opinions some weight is attached. My repason, therefore, for proposing that this proposition is to the constitution is that every hat is likely to be his fate.
